Role Overview

The Central London Assistant will support the Central London Co-ordinator, collectively this team is responsible for The Felix Project’s food re-distribution operation in Central London. This is a point to point collection and delivery service from food outlets to charities via a network of over 100 active volunteers. It is an ever-growing operation with ambitious dreams. The main responsibility of the role is to assist the Co-ordinator in all relevant operational and administrative tasks.

About The Felix Project:

The Felix Project is a London charity working with food suppliers and charities to reduce food waste and food poverty. We collect food from supermarkets, wholesalers and other food suppliers – food that is fresh and nutritious but cannot be sold for various reasons. We deliver this food free of charge to charities which provide meals or food parcels to their clients, many of whom are extremely vulnerable and living at the margins of society. Our business model is very lean, with every £1 donated delivering £5 of good food to people in need. We simply want to see good food go to good causes.

Each week, the fresh food we redistribute provides wholesome hot meals for over 9,000 Londoners including the elderly, the homeless, people with mental health issues, refugees and asylum seekers and vulnerable families and children.

About the Role:

The Central London Assistant will be required to help the Central London Co-ordinator fulfil all operational and developmental objectives as set by the organisation for the Central London region. They will be expected to engage appropriately with each group of stakeholders and strengthen existing relationships with their positive and enthusiastic demeanour. The assistant will help the co-ordinator with various tasks related to but not exclusive to volunteer recruitment, retention and management, charity and supplier relationship management, new growth initiatives within the operation.
